REMOVAL.
HENRY CUMMINS begs leave to return his best thanks for the liberal patronage bestowed upon him during the business of a perfumer, &c., and to announce that he has removed from his former residence, 233, George-street N., to more extensive and advantageous situation in King-street, one door from Pitt-street, where private families, hotel-keepers, masters of vessels, and others will meet with the very best articles, on the lowest terms. WILLIAM JOSEPH, Auctioneer and General Commission Agent, Auckland, New Zealand, begs to tender his services to merchants and others shipping goods to this market.
Mr. Joseph's long experience (seven years) of this colony, and of the most advantageous mode of effecting sales, presents considerable inducement to all those who may entrust goods to Mr. Joseph's care for sale and returns; and while every exertion will be made to accomplish a prompt disposal of the articles, the interest of the consignees will never be lost sight of: and when it is necessary that the goods entrusted to Mr. Joseph should be placed into the market at once, they will be well stored, and liberal advances made upon the consignment.
Mr. Joseph begs to refer to

The Godeffroy was to leave Hamburgh on the 1st October for Adelaide, with emigrants, and the Nordenhuiden on the 15th.—South Australian Register, January 13.

The Freak reports having passed two ships on the 18th instant in the Gulf of St. Vincent, bound for Adelaide, supposed to be the Wolfe, from Liverpool, and the Rajah, from the 9th month, with emigrants. On the 20th instant, passed a barque off Portland Bay, working to the westward, supposed to be the Henry Tanner, from Adelaide. On the 23rd passed a full-rigged ship to the westward of Curtis Island, supposed to be the General Hewitt, hence for Launceston; and the same day also signalled the schooner Velocity, hence for Port Phillip, off Wilson's Promontory. The Freak, on her way down, the river at Adelaide, rubbed off the brig Oak, which was beating up, and damaged the latter to a considerable extent, carrying away the starboard fore-chains, bulwarks, and rigging. The former only started her bowsprit, and slightly splintered the cutwater. The damage of the Oak it was thought would cost £100 to repair.

The cargo of the Phœnix consists of 161 bales wool, 6 bundles sheepskins, and 26 hides. She was detained at the bar off the Clarence four days from heavy southerly gales.

The Lucy Ann has returned to port after an absence of nearly seventeen months, with 300 barrels sperm oil. She has spoken no colonial whalers but what have already been reported.

The schooner Scotia was at anchor in Watson's Bay yesterday evening at sunset.

FOSSIL ZOOLOGY OF NEW SOUTH WALES.—No. 4.

PRODUCTUS.

P. punctuliferus. (Phil).

A species identical with this is common on Mount Wellington, near Hobart Town. It is described from Bolland and Florence Court in Geol. York. p. 216, and is figured pl. vii. fig. 15, n. It was identified by Mr. de Verneuil amongst specimens collected during the voyage of the French ship La Bonite. See Q. J. G. S. i. p. 407.

P. subtilis. (Phil).

Undistinguishable when minutely compared with the common British mountain limestone species. In the indurated schist of Lewin's Brook. [Localities in Europe are Rokeby, Yorks., Northumberland. (Geol. York. pl. vii. fig. 9, p. 215).]

P. mesolobus. (Sow).

In the calcareous flags and dark limestone of Hall's quarry, Hobart Town: associated with this there is abundance of a flatter species, concentrically wrinkled and with more than two strong ribs on the lower valve, and irregularly-placed round spines, two or three may or may not be distinct from P. fragaria and P. cora ata of the upper Devonian and lower Irish carboniferous shales. [It occurs also at Wollongong and the neighbouring Cowan. In Europe its localities are Bristol; Coalbrook Dale; Sussex; Bolland; and Hardkaw, Yorks. in Derbyshire; at Lilge, Visé, Frasnes, &c. it occurs a carboniferous fossil. In America it occurs in the States of Ohio and New York. (G. T. Vi. 397., Phil. Geol. York., pl. vii. fig. 9, p. 215. described Leptæna sod. in Palæon. Foss., p. 83, pl. 24, fig. 971, and as Strophalosia hydrophora, by Conrad, in Journ. Acad. Philad. iv. 1824, p. 275, fig. 8. Leptæna sod. P. cora are figured in Palæon. Foss., pl. 26, fig. 98 and 100. The latter is considered to embrace the following varieties:—P. punctulus, P. fragaria, P. fragaria the localities are at Plymouth, in Cornwall, and in the North of Ireland. (G. T. V., p. 702, pl. 54, fig. 3, pl. 56, fig. 6—P. fragaria is described as Leptæna fragaria by d'Archiac and de Verneuil. G. T. Vi., p. 397, from Petherwin and Barnstaple; Pro. also; Berneri, and Ilsley, Devon.]

P. undulatus. (M'Coy.)

Sp. Ch. Subsemicircular, cost-dried wider than long, convex, beset slightly on concave at the margin; sides nearly rectangular, obtusely rounded; beak large, tumid; surfaced with fine, close, sharp, undulating transverse wrinkles; a few obscure traces of oblong spines towards the margin.

This species is slightly allied to the Leptæna lepis of the Rev. Mr. Hall, membranacea, and L. mesolobe. (Phil. Pal. Foss.), but it is distinguished from the first two by its globose quadrangular form, concave front, and large tumid beak; and from the latter by its want of mesial ridge and spines, and by its fine transverse plication of the surface. [Lepis, seven lines in width, ten lines. Rare at Loder's Creek (near Singleton. P. mesolobe is figured in Geol. York. pl. vii. fig. 8, p. 215, and in Palæon. Foss., pl. 26, fig. 103, p. 61. Bronn. Leth. Geog. pl. 2, fig. 7. Monster Beitrage, pl. 14, fig. 15.]

P. scabriculus. (Mar.)

Allied to P. lantiquatus. Phil. Geol. York., pl. vii., fig. 2, p. 215. Sow. T. 317, fig. 1, 5, 6. Black Rock, near Cork. D'Archiac. G. T. vii. p. 397, from Ireland; Yorkshire; Derbyshire. Rutingen, in Westphalia; Sable in Feantre; Visé in Belgium; Moscow; Valdai; Kamtschatka of the Ural Mountains, in Russia; and Silesia, where it is a Silurian species. In Van Diemen's Land P. subquadratus, occurs on Mount Wellington, and Mount Wellington. Syz. p. 284; and in New South Wales at Wollongong.]

This species is described from Illawarra by Mr. Dana in Sil. Amer. Journ. IV., p. 183, as follows:—

Subquadrate, with front angles rounded, rather broader than long, hinge line straight, nearly of the breadth of the shell, front straight, upper valve convex, lower valve slightly longitudinally striated, with some connective plications, sometimes with occasional radiments of spines. Beak slightly convex, abruptly reflexed; beak small, projecting but little below the hinge line, and the apex not much inflected. Length of hinge line 1½ inches; depth of concavity below, over half an inch. This species is very unlike the Productylarus in its less prominent beak and longer hinge line. It is near the rugosus, but is much thicker and more convex above. [The same species occurs on various parts of the Hunter, and has generally been considered till Mr. Dana's publication, as Leptæna depressa. L. rugosa which is also confounded with the latter, is figured in Palæon. Foss. pl. 26, fig. 95, p. 94, and also described by Dalman. Swed. Trans. pt. 1. fig. 1. Bronn. Leth. Geog. pl. 2, fig. 8, and Sowerby. G. T. and pl. 66. fig. 1. It is found at Dudley, Devonsh. and at Dudley and Florence Court. (Phil. Geol. York. pl. vii. fig. 16, p. 216. L. depressa is also figured by Sowerby. G. T. f. 4. in Murchison's Silurian Syst. t. 12. f. 2. It occurs also in the United States, as at Cincinnati; Lockport; Cavern-hill; Nashville, Tennessee, and Virginia, and is figured as Strophomena sp. by Vanuxem, Report, p. 79. fig. 3. Geol. N. Y. 3 d. Dist. as by Conrad. Ann. Rep. 1839. p. 62.; as S. tenuistriata Ann. Rep. 1838. p. 176. f. 3, and as S. lineata Ann. Rep. 1839. p. 62. f. 3. pl. A. f. 4. see Proc. G. S. No. 15. p. 184).]

Leptæna

A species closely resembling L. Hardirostris (Phil.); but more square in outline, not so wide and more coarsely striated, is common in the shale of Duryugan. It also resembles the Chemiles Lequatoriana of the Ural Mountains, and the Chemiles Fallidensis of the Falkland Islands. [The latter species is scarcely distinguishable from L. Hardirostris (L. lata) which has a wide vertical and gonal graphical range. It is so near that species as to be easily confounded with it. L. sericea, which is figured in Sow. Geol. Trans. pl. 2. fig. 25, is also described by Dalman. Swed. Trans. pt. 1. fig. 1. Bronn. Leth. Geog. pl. 2, fig. 6, and Sowerby. G. T. and pl. 66. fig. 2. It is found at Dudley, Devonsh. and at Dudley and Florence Court. (Phil. Geol. York. pl. vii. fig. 16, p. 216. L. depressa is also figured by Sowerby. G. T. f. 4. in Murchison's Silurian Syst. t. 12. f. 2. It occurs also in the United States, as at Cincinnati; Lockport; Cavern-hill; Nashville, Tennessee, and Virginia, and is figured as Strophomena sp. by Vanuxem, Report, p. 79. fig. 3. Geol. N.
